

Plan Ahead: You Can Spend Thanksgiving Privately At These Hotels

Going out for Thanksgiving is always a popular option rather than having one family member take on the responsibility of putting on the dinner. A weekend at a hotel or resort is also popular right now given the months spent in quarantine by many families without a break. So it's not surprising that hotels have come forward with options to spend Thanksgiving together but away from other guests.

Inn at Perry Cabin, located on Maryland's Eastern Shore in the extremely quaint town of St. Michaels, converted its greenhouses, now known simply as the Houses, into glassed in dining units set to be open year round. Given its Chesapeake Bay location, the local crabs and oysters will figure into the holiday menu (still being formulated) along with the herbs, fruits and vegetables from the inn's gardens and orchards. The nautical décor in the 19th century inn reflects its setting overlooking the Miles River. Sailing is usually one of its more popular activities but weather permitting, another pastime during that weekend could be 18 holes on the Pete Dye designed Links at Perry Cabin course.
